Who we are

Last Mile4D is a non-profit based in Washington, DC that designs and implements education and training programs with a focus on the health, rights-to-health and safety of women living in the most remote and underserved areas of the developing world, known as "Last Mile" communities.

What we do

We design and deliver community-centric programs that ensure women and girls have the knowledge, access to information, human capacity and agency to exercise their rights-to-health and safety, as well as their rights to be free of gender-based violence. We work with our local partners to build their capacity and train them in the use of VPack, which is the bundling of our integrated teaching methodology, secure online platform – information dissemination, communication and documentation – and the mobile solar powered equipment.

Where we work

We work in the oppressed and remote communities of East Africa, the Caucasus, Central Asia and Middle East.
